Web-developer wanted!

Europe and Me is looking to contract a freelance web-developer to create a new website.

Our website (europeandme.eu) has served us well, but as 2016 gets older it has begun to feel tired, and we are looking for people who can work with our editorial board to design and implement an exciting modern replacement.

If you want to work with an international team to help transform our popular website into an exciting multimedia platform hosting transnational journalism of every variety, this could be the job for you. Great content requires a great website both in terms of looks and functionality, this is where we feel we need an expert or two, which could be you.

We are looking for a web-developer to design a replacement for our current website (europeandme.eu) that meets our specific needs, and to oversee the migration of content from the old site to the new one.

Europe & Me supports youth journalism and pan-European collaboration and in the past we have won the prestigious Charlemagne Youth Prize. E&M is an entirely voluntary, charitable organisation and not for profit. This said, for the right project and web-developer, we have the capacity to invest a medium amount in bringing our web presence up to date. We are willing to negotiate the financial compensation with prospective candidates in order to both find the best candidate and ensure a high-quality result.

Interested? Think you could help? Have an idea to push our magazine forward? Get in touch!

To apply for this position, please contact application[at]europeandme.eu with a timescale for the project, your desired pay, and any reference or previous work you feel supports your application.
